Directions: Explain the accomplishments of each person. Next, use historical information, such as their beliefs or actions, to decide if they are more like you or not like you. Then explain how you are more like this person or not like this person. (Use historical facts- don't say "This person is like me because our names both start with the letter S." Instead, prove you know the historical importance of this person. Ex. "Sequoya is like me because we both love language. Sequoya made a written language and when I was younger I made a secret coded language with my friends so we could pass notes that no one else could understand!")
