

Spot was four months old when he went to live with his new family. He was so excited. Everything was new to him. His new owners came to get him in their car. They put a dog collar around his neck. They snapped a leash onto the collar. At first, Spot was not sure what to do. He felt the collar pull on his neck. He tried to pull back against it. Finally, he jumped forward. The collar stopped pulling on his neck. Spot soon learned that when he felt the collar pull, he needed to move towards it. His new owners seemed happy. He had learned how to lead.

Then Spot saw the first car he had ever seen. It looked huge to him! He was a very small puppy, and the car looked like a giant monster to him. Spot was afraid. He barked and barked. His new owners smiled. They thought it was funny that he did not know about cars. After a while, the woman got down on the ground. She tried to show Spot that he did not need to be afraid. She petted him, and she snuggled him in her lap. Then she touched the car with one hand. Spot saw that the monster did not hurt the lady. He stopped barking and started wagging his tail. The people smiled again. They were proud of Spot. He had learned not to be afraid of cars. Spot's new family took him home. They showed him his new house.
